ADB EXPANDS CUSTOMER AGREEMENT WITH NHS PATHFINDER

ADB signs new contract to enable eight hospital trusts to conduct e-procurement activities

Toronto, ON – March 17, 2005 – ADB Systems International (TSX: ADY; OTCBB: ADBYF), a global provider of asset lifecycle management solutions, announced today that it will provide the technology platform for a major electronic procurement initiative of the National Health Service (NHS), Europe’s largest provider of healthcare services.

ADB’s technology will be used to create a collaborative procurement environment that will electronically connect eight hospital trusts and medical facilities with their community of suppliers.

As announced previously, the Healthcare Purchasing Consortium (HPC) was identified as a Pathfinder by the NHS, and given a mandate to develop and implement a collaborative procurement model that enables hospital trusts to pool their resources to electronically buy medical consumables, equipment and services at reduced costs and improved efficiency.

“Since April of 2003, we have steadily expanded our working relationship with the HPC based on our repeated ability to deliver procurement technology that meets various performance targets, including the realization of considerable process savings,” said Jeff Lymburner, CEO of ADB Systems International Inc. “Moving forward with the deployment of the procurement hub model represents a significant expansion of our efforts with the HPC and the NHS, and paves the way for working increasingly together with a leading professional services firm that is actively involved in this initiative.”

The procurement hub initiative will be completed in a series of phases. More than £770 million worth of purchases will be conducted annually through the collaborative procurement hub using ADB’s technology that will include capabilities for supplier integration, catalog creation and management, remote requisitioning and purchasing activity management.
